

As I said earlier, it can be beneficial if you have complicated logic based on states and transitions. However, it can be overengineering and introduce unwanted complexity in your codebase. For that reason, I only use them when I need to deal with really complicated state-related logic.