```php
     * @param array $models
     * @param int $type
     */
    private static function addItems(array $models, $type)
    {
        foreach ($models as $model) {
            $item = new Search_View_Container_Relation_Item(
                $model,
                $type,
                true
            );

            self::$_relationContainer->addItem($item, $type);
        }
    }
```

Today it's February 2, 2022. What do you think? After six years, do I have any clue what the heck is a Search_View_Container_Relation_Item? No, I have no idea what it is. I only know one thing for sure: it does not help me. This project is about freelancers and projects. This class does something with searching projects (I guess), but it does not reveal that intention. Did you ever hear a product manager saying: wow, we got so much positive feedback on the Search View Container Factory Project feature?

Maybe if I take a step back and look at the file structure, I have a better idea.
